

STANDARD OPERATING PROCEDURE

New Age Steel Plate

Overview/Description of Discipline

- There will be a total of twenty (20) steel plates to shoot. These will consist of five (5) target plates on four (4) racks. Two (2) racks will favor the left side of the range and two (2) will favor the right. The racks will be set at any distance between ten (10) and twenty five (25) yards. This will be at the discretion of the Match Director, as will the sizes of the plates to be used at that particular match. The shooter will be called to the firing line (left or right starting position as directed by the Match Director) at which time he/she will come to the firing line with an unloaded pistol and two magazines loaded with ten rounds each. The shooter will place one magazine on the bench aligned with the left side targets and one magazine on the bench aligned with the right side targets. The shooter will return to the starting position and will be instructed to load and make ready (low ready position) or unloaded gun on the table (as directed by the Match Director). At the sound of the whistle he/she will begin firing, knocking down as many as possible of the ten (10) steel plates at the starting position and then move to the remaining position to knock down as many of the ten (10) steel plates as possible. The empty magazine must be dropped at the starting position prior to proceeding to the remaining position. The shooter's score will be based on overall time with 5 seconds added for each missed plate and 10 seconds added for each procedural error (one maximum per relay). The order of shooters will be determined by lottery prior to the match. A match will consist of two or three relays (at the discretion of the Match Director). Winner will be the shooter with the shortest total time for the relays. Remaining shooters will be placed accordingly using their total time.
